TOPEKA DRESS REFORM.

The New York "Sun" Comments on the Proposed New Departure.

[From the New York Sun.] dress for women. We regret to say that at the bank. It has enabled me to it is not a pretty dress. The cloth leggings are baggy and clumsy and give fashionable circles which surrounded the impression that their wearers are you when you were born—destined to reil club was crowded as it had knock kneed and have swelled ankles. Tho "Turkish trousers" would be laughed at by the gravest old Turk in all Turkey; and if any Turk living in New York were to see a Topeka woman with them on, he would certainly exclaim, "Allah is great!" The Topeka skirt is the funniest article of the new Topeka costume for Topeka women. It may be worn either indeed," I said, thumping him on the oose or close; but we should think the shoulder. "Well, go on." loose style might be better adapted to

It is indescribable. We would rather like to see here a Topeka woman in the Topeka dress. She could enjoy a very merry day by taking a forenoon tramp up the Bowery, an afternoon walk down Broadway, and an evening stroll in the Tenderioin district. It might be necessary to call out the whole of the police force for the pre-servation of the public solemnity; but we would not care for that, nor would the woman in leggings care a snap for it.

The Populist party of Kansas is in favor of the new Topeka dress, and we to the sunflower on top.

By the way, we cannot imagine why the Turkish style goes only from waist to knee. An orthodox Turkish woman, faithful to the Koran and the fashions of her country, conceals her face when she is at large by wearing a thick veil over it, you--" so that only her eyes are revealed. It is the privilege of her husband alone to behold her unveiled face when she is out of the world's sight. Now, it is evident that the lady Turks of Topeka, who are determined to wear the trousers while discarding the face-concealing veil, are not of the real Turkish cast. They are unworthy of both Topeks and Turkey, less worthy of Turkey than of Topeks. We say they ought to wear the impene-trable veil of feminine Turkish modesty over their faces, which would thus meet the gaze of only those who have a right to see them. As, however, the Topeka women have begun to imitate Turkey, they may yet swathe their heads in a way that would cause a Turk to wreathe his face in smiles. If they do not, we should look upon them as coquettes.

The Topeka reformers are not afraid. They have organized "relief squads," which are to march over the state in Turkish trousers for the purpose of promoting the use of them. We invite any one of these relief squads to visit New York, and we promise it a tremendous reception in City Hall square. There are here a good many real and living Turks, who will surely enjoy the sight of it, not less than it will be enjoyed by the common run of the population. We await the first of the Turkish squads Topeka women. We smile while thinking of It.

Five Hundred Swallows Take Habitation in E. Bennett's House.

Any one who happens to be in the vi-cinity of Eighth and Buchanan streets any evening just before twilight can witness a strange sight. There are hundreds of chimney swallows in the neighborhood and in the evening they flock together as if by appointment and make a tour of inspection.

They circle around over the house tops after all," tempt to s there they hesitate for a short time and me time." flutter around the immense chimney which rises above the building and then the entire flock disappears down the chimney. There are at least 500 of the birds and where they all find room is a

I sprang to my feet, but he was gone. Then my pent-up feelings found an outlet, and I cried a little to myself, wondering at the secret trouble which was gnawing at my husband's heart. That look on his face haunted me all night and for many a long day after.

Laurence Cushmore, my husband's friend, told me afterward the end of the story, although he never guessed peka last week, says his institution has the truth. About a week must have passed since that nocturnal conversation with my husband, and Cushmore was standing at the window of the Nonparell club talking with my brother Lacy.

"Well, if you don't know who the fellow is I'm sure nobody else does." Times protests that there are only eight he said. Lacy had a reputation for knowing everybody in the city. "I the secret of his mysterious opp went rate.

"He plays a confoundedly good rame of cards," said my brother. He had an intense admiration for anyona who could make money.

"So much the worse," said Cushnore, turning his pockets inside out with a comic gesture of despair. "He cleaned me out last night. One does not mind losing one's money to a fellow like Horace Linley, that lucky brother-in-law of yours, but when it comes to an interloper like this man Balsam, or whatever the fellow's name is, it-well, you know what I mean. By jove, I would give anything to see him fleeced-not that I have much left that is worth having, even at a gift."

"Linley is going to play with him to-night." Both the men turned and found

"It's a lie!" Balsam hissed. He find some support among the members, and finding none, he made a sudden movement toward the door. Lney sent a waiter for a policeman, but my husband called the man back.

"There's the door," he said, pointing with his finger. "Go." The other put his hand in his posket, drew forth a huge roll of bills, and laid his winnings on the table, feeling like a whipped dog.

Horace removed a few of the notes -probably a hundred dollars-and handed them to Balsam without a word. A murmur of approbation at his generosity ran round the room.

When the door was closed upon Balsam, and those who had witnessed the disgraceful episode had returned to the card room, my husband begged to be allowed to say a word publicly. "Gentlemen," he said, "I am going to act on impulse. From this moment, and in your presence. I swear solemnly never to touch a card again for the remainder of my life. Whether I am a fool for my pains or not, will probably be a matter of dispute, but my mind is made up. I have never before seen cheating at cards, and never again will I, willingly submit to such an experience. I am impelled to the course I am about to take, and I take it confident that I shall at least have your sympathy." There were murmurs of applause, which were drowned in louder murmurs of surprise, and several men said openly that they considered Horace an idiot. However, it was admitted on all sides that my husband ! had conducted himself admirably.

I never knew until the day of my husband's death the truth of the matter. As he lay dying, mourned by hundreds of acquaintances, and above all, by the members of the Nonparell club, he called me to him and told me the secret of his life. Ah! how shall I tell the rest?

My Horace, the husband whom I loved, who was more to me than all the world, was the most successful Steam Laumiry. eard sharper of this or an vother age.
